ScottMadden Dives into Robotic Process Automation: Practical Tips for Implementing RPA in Your Organization

ATLANTA, GA – (September 26, 2017) – ScottMadden, Inc., a general management consulting firm, will soon partner with ADP, a leading provider of human resources management software and services, to host a complimentary robotic process automation (RPA) webcast. The session will be held on Thursday, October 5, 2017, from 1–2PM EST and will highlight practical tips for implementing RPA in your organization.

RPA has been a significant game changer for organizations and can yield substantial operational benefits. While many are considering the technology and others are piloting it, you may not know how to get started. There's a lot of hype out there on the web, but there's also some practical "straight talk" you need to understand the journey you are embarking on.

What is RPA and how can it make a difference? Is it right for your organization? And, if so, are you prepared? During the session, Brad DeMent, partner and finance and accounting practice lead at ScottMadden, will review this innovative transformation tool to help you meet your improvement goals and ADP will share its own case study. Attendees will learn practical tips for selecting processes, determining IT needs, developing robots, and establishing a sustainable governance model.

"How do you build a strategy for something you have yet to understand? Seems logical, but we see many companies expending effort defining a digital strategy and conducting exhaustive RPA vendor searches, before they have even conducted a simple RPA pilot," said Mr. DeMent. "Moving an RPA pilot to production will help you discover the real decisions that need to be made, and unveil how your company will respond to digital initiatives. Join us to see what this looks like... then start thinking about a digital strategy!"
